WELCOME TO
METRO BOSTONTORONTO POLICE REVIEW
SUSPECT'S 'CRYPTIC' POST

The man accused of plowing a van into pedestrians on a crowded Toronto sidewalk, killing 10 people in Canada's deadliest mass killing in decades, left a "cryptic message" on social media before his attack, police said on Tuesday. Suspect Alek Minassian, 25, was charged with 10 counts of murder and 13 counts of attempted murder in the incident. One possible clue to his motive emerged on Tuesday as Facebook confirmed Minassian wrote a post before the incident that referenced an "incel rebellion." The term is shorthand used in online message boards for "involuntary celibacy," a loose social media movement of men who blame women for their celibacy. The post also voiced admiration for a man who killed six college students before taking his own life in California in 2014 and who cited the "cruelness of women" for his virgin status. "The accused is alleged to have posted a cryptic message on Facebook minutes before" the attack, said Graham Gibson, a Toronto police sergeant. He said the question of whether the attack was driven by anger against women was "going to be part of our investigation."

TRUMP AND MACRON SEEK NEW MEASURES ON IRAN

President Donald Trump and French President Emmanuel Macron pledged on Tuesday to seek stronger measures to contain Iran, as the U.S. leader considers whether to ditch an international accord meant to prevent Tehran from obtaining a nuclear weapon. At a joint news conference after lengthy talks, Trump did not repeat threats to withdraw from the 2015 agreement with Iran which was negotiated by his predecessor, former President Barack Obama, but made clear he has little patience for staying in the deal. Midway through a three-day state visit by Macron, the two leaders were remarkably chummy, repeatedly shaking hands and extolling each other's friendship. The friendliness extended to their talks on Iran, Syria and trade but there was no indication of a breakthrough on Macron's bid to persuade Trump to keep the U.S. in the Iran nuclear deal, maintain troops in Syria and exempt European allies from steel tariffs. "It's not a mystery, we did not have the same starting positions, stances, and neither you nor I have a habit of changing our stances or going with the wind. That being said, I can say that we've had a very frank discussion," said Macron.

FRENCH RAIL WORKERS AND STUDENTS DEMONSTRATE IN LYON

Protesters hold a banner and wave union flags as French rail workers and students demonstrate on April 24, 2018, in Lyon, eastern France. French rail workers launched their latest two-day strike over plans to overhaul the national state-owned railway company SNCF. The rolling rail strikes, set to last until June 28, are being seen as the biggest challenge yet to the president's sweeping plans to shake up France and make it more competitive.

OFFICIAL: WH DOCTOR
JACKSON TO FIGHT FOR JOB

President Donald Trump's physician Ronny Jackson will not withdraw as the nominee to head the Veterans Affairs department and will fight allegations about his conduct that surfaced ahead of a Senate confirmation hearing, a White House official said on Tuesday. Jackson met with Trump on Tuesday after the president said he was leaving the decision up to the physician. The White House is now preparing a defense, feeling that Jackson — well liked by administration figures from both parties — was being railroaded. "We're pushing back," the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity. President Donald Trump on Tuesday said his presidential physician must decide whether or not to move forward as his nominee to lead the Veterans Affairs department, saying he had not heard about reported allegations of past behavior issues. Speaking to reporters at a White House news conference, Trump said his pick, Ronny Jackson, was "one of the finest people that I have met" and "a great leader," but that he did not want to put him through an ugly nomination process in the U.S. Senate.

EPA PROPOSES LIMITS TO SCIENCE USED IN POLICY

The Environmental Protection Agency proposed a rule on Tuesday that would limit the kinds of scientific research it can use in crafting regulations, an apparent concession to big business that has long requested such restrictions. Under the new proposals, the EPA will no longer be able to rely on scientific research that is underpinned by confidential medical and industry data. Scientists and former EPA officials worry it will hamstring the agency's ability to protect public health by putting key data off limits. "The science that we use is going to be transparent, it's going to be reproducible," Pruitt told a gathering at the EPA. "It's going to be able to be analyzed by those in the marketplace, and those that watch what we do can make informed decisions about whether we've drawn the proper conclusions or not," said Pruitt, who has been pursuing President Donald Trump's mission to ease the regulatory burden on business. The EPA has for decades relied on scientific research that is rooted in confidential medical and industry data as a basis for its air, water and chemicals rules.

Boston college students aim to end relationship violence

Through the One Love Foundation, students in Boston are working to end physical and emotional abuse by romantic partners through education and outreach efforts.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Do you know what an unhealthy relationship looks like?

It may seem like a simple question, but physical and emotional abuse by romantic partners is all too common, especially for college-aged women — those between 16 and 24 years old experience the highest per-capita rate of intimate partner violence.

College students in Boston are working to change that statistic with the help of the One Love Foundation, founded by the family of Yeardley Love, a 22-year-old University of Virginia who was murdered by her ex-boyfriend in 2010.

“One Love is founded on a tragic, but incredibly relevant, societal concern.”

Maddie Curley

Sophie Barry and Olivia Ostrover, both 20-year-old sophomores at Harvard, first learned about Love's story in 2016. They were shocked they hadn't heard it before, they said, and are now working to make One Love a strong presence on Harvard's campus.

“College is often the time when people enter their first relationship, and with that comes growing pains,” they said in an email. “We believe that there are so many terrible events that we cannot control, such as disease and natural disasters, but it is entirely in our power to have healthy relationships. This is an issue we can prevent and solve by raising awareness.”

The foundation hosts education workshops about the signs of abuse and encourages people to share their experiences being in and getting out of unhealthy relationships.

In 2014, students from Boston College and the University of Virginia — lacrosse players, like Love had been — went even further, starting “Yards for Yeardley,” a fundraising event for the foundation for which student-athletes get sponsored to run (or bike, or swim) a certain number of yards.

Students across Boston continue to carry out that effort. Maddie Curley, a 22-year-old senior at Boston University, said it's an easy way to get people involved “because we are running for something bigger than ourselves.”

Curley first learned about One Love when BU's Dean of Students hosted a One Love workshop with student-athletes, which involved a film-based discussion on the hidden signs of an unhealthy relationship.

“Many of the signs shown in the film were all too familiar to me, and I felt I had a chance to join a movement that would not only help myself, but also my community,” she said. “One Love is founded on a tragic, but incredibly relevant, societal concern. ... My hope is that through One Love's outreach, exercising kindness can become second nature.”

Bryon Hefner pleads not guilty, ordered to stay away from Massachusetts State House

The man at the center of a scandal that has rocked the Massachusetts Senate appeared in Suffolk Superior Court Tuesday and pleaded not guilty to indecent assault and battery, open and gross lewdness and dissemination of an illicit nude photograph.

During a court appearance just around the corner from the State House, Assistant Clerk Magistrate Lisa Medeiros ordered Bryon Hefner to stay away from the grounds of the state capitol. Medeiros and the attorneys for Hefner also agreed on a March 2019 date for Hefner's trial.

The prosecution also shed more light on the crimes that Hefner allegedly committed, filing a statement of the case that details incidents involving four male victims.

The turmoil over Hefner's alleged crimes committed against men with business on Beacon Hill led his husband, Amherst Democrat Sen. Stan Rosenberg, to resign from the presidency in early December. The Senate Ethics Committee launched an investigation into whether Rosenberg broke any rules.

Attorney Tracy Miner said Hefner looks forward to upcoming court proceedings.

"Mr. Hefner Rosenberg has pled not guilty to the charges and looks forward to defending himself in a court of law where accusers cannot remain anonymous and must face cross-examination," Miner said in a written statement she distributed outside of court. "Unfortunately, he has already been pilloried in the press for political purposes, having never had a trial."

"[Hefner] has already been pilloried in the press for political purposes..."

Attorney Tracy Miner

Assistant Attorney General Jennifer Snook said Hefner is charged with a "pattern" of assault that "spanned several years," and she said he "targeted both young men and older men."

In June 2015, Hefner allegedly groped a man identified as Person 1 through his clothes at Hefner's Beacon Hill condominium. Person 1 pushed Hefner's hand away, and at one point Hefner unzipped the man's pants, according to the statement of the case. The man escaped to a bathroom where he stayed until a mutual friend arrived.

The following April, traveling between a political event to another event in Boston, Hefner allegedly groped Person 1 in the backseat of a car, and the man pushed him away, saying, "Screw off." At dinner at the Boston event the two were seated next to each other, and Hefner again grabbed the man's genitals through his clothes and without his consent, according to the prosecution.

Bryon Hefner pleaded not guilty on Tuesday morning to all 10 charges at his arraignment in Suffolk Superior Court. GETTY IMAGES

In August 2016 at a birthday party on an apartment building's roof deck, Hefner allegedly told a man, identified as Person 2, that he was "hot," and then later as people were leaving Hefner pulled him close and "kissed him aggressively on the lips without his consent."

On Tuesday, Hefner was ordered to report twice per month by phone to probation and to surrender his passport. A pretrial conference was set for June 13 and the trial date was set for March 25, 2019.

Trump denied pee-pee tapes with this alibi. Flight logs prove he's lying

A new report shows that Trump's plane stayed overnight in Moscow in 2013.

letters@metro.us

President Trump has denied he ever stayed in Moscow overnight, most notably to James Comey when he was director of the FBI. But flight records show he did, during the Miss Universe pageant in 2013.

The logistics are key to the Steele Dossier, the collection of intelligence indicating collusion between Trump and the Russian government, and what is usually called its "salacious allegation" — that Trump hired prostitutes to urinate on a bed at the Ritz-Carlton Moscow while he watched, and the Russians have him on tape, which is being used as blackmail. "Pee-pee tapes" is the shorthand used by late-night comics.

Trump has said that was impossible, because he flew to Moscow for the pageant but left without spending the night. But Bloomberg reported that, according to flight records, Trump flew to Moscow on a private jet owned by his business partner Phil Ruffin. The plane landed in Moscow on Friday, Nov. 8. It left the city at 3:58 a.m. on Sunday, Nov. 10.

The plane touched down at Newark International Airport at 4:11 a.m. Eastern time. "I just got back from Russia—learned lots & lots. Moscow is a very interesting and amazing place!" Trump tweeted the same day.

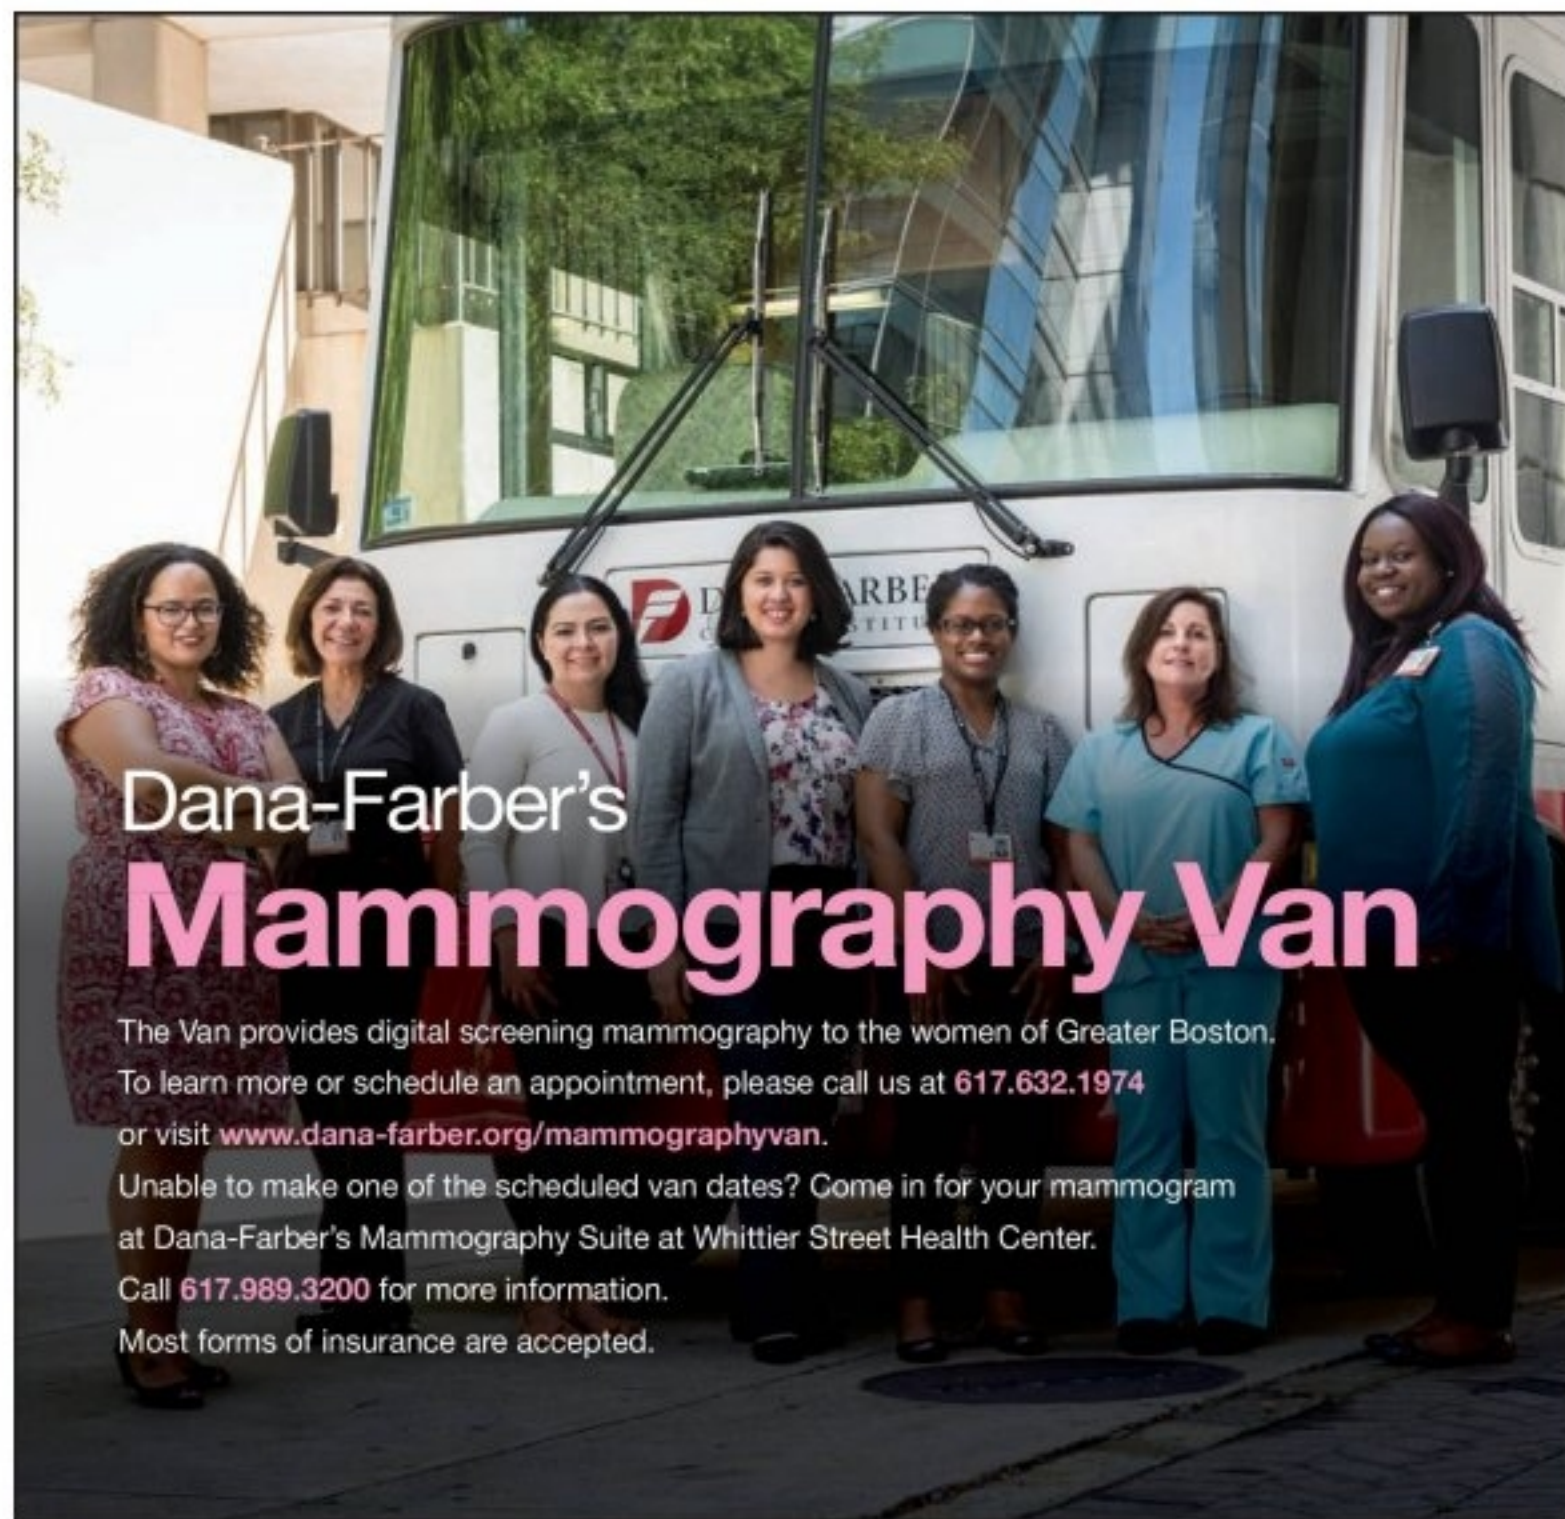

TRUMP'S EARLIER DENIALS OF THE PEE-PEE TAPES

In his memos, Comey described Trump's denials. The first came during their dinner at the White House in January 2017. "He said he arrived in the morning, did events, then showered and dressed for the pageant at the hotel," and then left for the event, Comey wrote. "Afterwards, he returned only to get his things because they departed for New York by plane that same night."

On the second occasion in February 2017, Trump "explained, as he did at our dinner, that he hadn't stayed overnight in Russia during the Miss Universe trip," Comey wrote.

If Trump wasn't truthful with Comey, that presents another potential complication for him: Lying to the FBI is a federal offense.

In his new book, "A Higher Loyalty," Comey wrote that Trump seemed fixated on reports of the pee-pee tapes and asked Comey to somehow prove they weren't true.

Dana-Farber Wants You to Know the Signs and Symptoms of Testicular Cancer

Testicular cancer occurs when abnormal cells in one or both of the testes begins to grow uncontrollably. It is the most common type of cancer for younger men between the ages of 15 and 40, with the average age at diagnosis just 33.

Risk factors for developing testicular cancer include having an undescended testicle, having abnormal development of the testes, a personal history of testicular cancer, family history of testicular cancer (especially in a father or brother), and being white. Fortunately, it is one of the most curable types of cancers when caught early.

What are signs and symptoms of testicular cancer?

Signs and symptoms of testicular cancer include pain or discomfort in a testicle or in the scrotum, a dull ache in the lower abdomen or groin, a painless lump or swelling in either testicle, sudden build-up of swelling in the scrotum, and back pain.

How do you diagnose testicular cancer?

Testicular cancer is usually diagnosed with a testicular exam, a blood test for tumor markers, and an ultrasound (which is quick and painless). Regular self-exams are also an important step in catching testicular cancer early.

Once diagnosed, a urologist will order a CT scan to determine if the cancer has spread beyond the testicle in a process known as staging. Stage I means that the scan does not show any evidence of cancer beyond the testicle; stage II means that the scan has identified cancer that has spread beyond the testicle to the lymph nodes in the abdomen; and stage III means that the cancer has spread beyond the cancer and abdominal lymph nodes to additional areas of the body.

How do you treat testicular cancer?

The treatment approach to testicular cancer depends on the type – seminomas or non-seminomas – and whether or not the cancer has spread beyond the testicle. Surgery to remove the testicle, called inguinal orchiectomy, is the most common treatment for testicular cancer. Surgery cures most patients, but some patients may undergo chemotherapy or radiation treatment to kill any remaining cancer cells after the operation.

Although men can maintain fertility with one testicle, chemotherapy and radiation may temporarily or permanently reduce sperm count. In this case, patients interested in biologically having a child can consider sperm banks to store their sperm. Furthermore, the removal of a testicle does not affect the ability to have an erection. In fact, the vast majority of men with testicular cancer have it in only on testicle, so after surgery the remaining testicle produces all of the needed hormones that affect masculinity including hair growth, voice, and sex drive.

Samira Wiley knows exactly where she's going

In the second season of "The Handmaid's Tale," Moira struggles with her identity and sense of belonging after escaping Gilead. MULU

Even if her character on "The Handmaid's Tale" doesn't. Here, the actress talks visibility and acknowledging the series' similarities to slavery.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS

The second season of "The Handmaid's Tale" premieres today, and first and foremost explores freedom: What is it really? And does the fighting stop once you get it? The definitive answer in the world of Gilead is no — even when you've escaped the oppressive republic, like June's best friend Moira, as played by Samira Wiley.

Wiley, by the way — most famous for her role as Poussey in "Orange Is the New Black" — is as genial and genuine as you can imagine. And super proud of her latest role: role model. "I definitely feel like visibility is an incredibly powerful tool," she says over the phone. "To realize that because I am who I am and somehow now by the grace of God I have a voice and a face that people recognize... It's a blessing."

We chatted with the 31-year-old about freedom in the world of Gilead, the series' unmistakable similarities with slavery and being considerably more diverse than the source material.

Moira struggles with her identity this season. She can't go back to who she was before, but she doesn't know where she's going either.

[Identity] is a really big question for Moira this entire season. She's just escaped to Canada [and] it's set up to be this wonderful transition: she's in this new country, she can do whatever. But it's scary. She doesn't know anyone here — she doesn't even know who she is in this world. In Gilead — even though it was a horrible, horrible place — she was there for so long. It was like the devil that she knew. But in Canada, it's sort of like, "Well who even am I when I'm here?" [And] there were questions I had [as Moira]: Do I try to go date someone? Do I try to be a normal person? do I even try to act like I'm normal at all? Because everybody knows this ain't normal.

Freedom doesn't necessarily solve her problems. Instead, it seems to bring her a new slate of them.

We know her as this hard,

"We don't want to make a show with all white people, you know what I mean?"

bad-ass, amazing woman who can do anything. But really she's become fragile. She realizes she can't shake Gilead, she can't get it off of her. She's even having to resort to calling herself Ruby, from that time, because she literally doesn't even know who she is. And not only that, but who she wants to be. I mean, can you imagine saying, "You can't have anything, you're just locked up in this room," and then all of a sudden you cross the border and you can have anything that you want? It's too much for her. And she struggles with where she fits in this world.

The similarities to slavery are really obvious, especially this season. What do you think of the criticism that "The Handmaid's Tale" erases that part of America's history?

I do think there's some validity to [those] questions that are being raised, in terms of how [slavery] fits into this world. And to be honest, I don't have all the answers for that. In terms of me being an actor and wanting to make this fictional world make the most sense, we have to answer these difficult questions as well.

In listening to you, my head seems to be in the same place as you. I don't totally understand [how we fix it], but it's just a conversation. It's something that we need to talk about and I'm glad that people are talking about it. And it's something that I'll continue to talk to the creators of the show about as well.

It's hard because while I want to see the similarities acknowledged on screen, I'm also glad it's a diverse series.

The book is a completely white world. If we were sticking to exactly what Margaret [Atwood] did in the book, I wouldn't be a part of this show. But Bruce Miller, who is the creator and showrunner, said he didn't want to make a show like that. The intention was to make a show [where the world] looks like what the world really does look like. We don't want to make a show with all white people, you know what I mean?

'THE HANDMAID'S TALE' GLOSSARY OF TERMS

Need a refresher course on the terms and expressions of Gilead? Here's an essential guide to the terminology of "The Handmaid's Tale." Under his eye, my dudes.

Aunts: Older women who are "true believers" of Gilead's totalitarian government. These cruel mistresses are responsible for grooming Handmaids to live in the houses of the Commanders.

Colonies: Areas of toxic, radioactive waste that are cleaned by women that have been ousted from Gilead.

Ceremony: When a Handmaid is ovulating, she's forced into having sex with the Commander while she lays between his wife's legs.

Commanders: The highest-ranking men in Gilead who are assigned Handmaids.

Econowives: These are working class women who are married to men who aren't Commanders — and weren't forced to become Handmaids.

Eyes: Secret, sometimes undercover police officers responsible for detecting traitors and keeping track of any suspicious activity.

Gender Traitors: This term is used to describe men and women who engage in same-sex activities or relationships.

Guardians of the Faith: Young, low-ranking men. Some work for and live with Commanders; others patrol the streets of Gilead, maintaining order with intimidation and machine guns.

Handmaids: Fertile women assigned to Commanders and their Wives to help the couple conceive. Handmaids have been divorced, were married to a man who had been divorced before Gilead, or never married.

Marthas: Infertile women that are made to work as servants in the houses of Commanders.

Unwoman: A lady that has the misfortune to be infertile, unmarried, widowed, a feminist, a lesbian, a nun, or generally question the rule of Gilead. Almost always sent to work (and die) in the Colonies.

From modern America to dystopian Gilead: How far away are we?

A few years from now we could all be saying "Under his eye."

HENRIETTA JONES
letters@metro.us

There's a heartbreaking scene in Season 2 of "The Handmaid's Tale" where Emily (Alexis Bledel) is left behind at the airport, her family traveling on to Canada. Mentioned in Season 1, it's hardly a spoiler, still gut wrenching.

This the power of "The Handmaid's Tale"; a show that makes viewers take an uncomfortable look at the parallels between everyday life in America, and the fictional theocracy of Gilead — and consider what if? As the new season begins, it's worth asking: just how different are we to Gilead?

"Under his eye" — Privacy
In Gilead, the phrase "Under his Eye" reminds characters they're under the judgment of god, but also reinforces the fear that the secret police are watching.

From surveillance cameras to full-body scans at airports, everyday privacy has slowly been eroded for "the greater good." However, the recent Cambridge Analytica scandal established there's always someone watching — just like in Gilead.

"Blessed be the fruit" — Abortion

In Gilead, abortion is considered murder. And in the U.S., a three-term state senator in Idaho suggested the death penalty for abortion. Over in Ohio, Bill HG565 takes this further, suggesting criminal charges against medical doctors performing abortions — much like the hanging corpse of the abortion doctor on the wall in Gilead.

"May the Lord open" — Complacency

It's easy to shake your head and ignore career politicians. However, "The Handmaid's Tale" is a powerful commentary on the danger of complacency.

"I guess you kind of get used to things being one way" says Janine, as she scrubs blood from the walls. She has a point: today, things once remarkable have become predictable and expected.

"Nothing changes instantaneously," says Offred. "In a gradually heating bathtub, you'd be boiled to death before you knew it."

"Nolite te bastardes carborundorum, bitches" — Resistance Of course, plenty of people are noticing change — and resisting. From Black Lives Matter to #metoo, and the teens pushing back with #riseup, ordinary Americans are standing up to the patriarchy. Don't let the bastards get you down, writes Offred's predecessor in an act of rebellion.

"There was an Offred before me" — History
While Margaret Atwood's original book was based on a loose collection of historical events, one of the TV series' most chilling plot developments is the discovery that handmaidens are Gilead's most valuable export.

While it might seem like fiction, globally human trafficking is a $32 billion industry, and there are over 4.5 million people experiencing forced sexual exploitation.

"Go in grace"
As Aunt Lydia says, "Ordinary is just what you're used to." Don't get used to ordinary.

The Wahlberg family unveiled the new Wahlburgers food truck last week. ALL PHOTOS PROVIDED

Wahlbergs bring Wahlburgers home to Dorchester

The Wahlberg family was back in their old neighborhood last week to unveil their new Wahlburgers food truck.

Nearly 500 fans got to munch on burgers as they joined Donnie Wahlberg, chef Paul, Bob, mama Alma and Wahlburgers CEO Rick Vanzura for the ribbon-cutting ceremony at the South Bay Center shopping plaza in Dorchester. Mark Wahlberg joined the fun, too, over FaceTime, as the actor was in Atlanta filming the upcoming comedy "Instant Family" with Rose Byrne and Octavia Spencer.

Since the family grew up in the neighborhood, setting up shop in Dorchester means a lot to the Wahlbergs.

"It's home, it's always been our home," Donnie said. "To see Dorchester sort of thriving now and to be part of bringing jobs to this neighborhood and investing back into the neighborhood that gave so much to us, it's just a great source of pride for all of us."

Donnie also name-dropped a few of his favorite restaurants in the area during the festivities, including McKenna's and the Ashmont Grille. The New Kids on the Block star joked that the latter used to be a bar where "everyone would be having fights" before it became a "great restaurant."

The singer and performer couldn't be happier to bring Wahlburgers to Dorchester's food scene with the truck, which will set up shop at the South Bay Center Thursdays through Saturdays when it's not being used for off-site events. A brick and mortar restaurant is being built at the plaza as well, with plans to

The team also wanted to make sure they had all the right stuff in place before heading back home. "There'd be nothing worse than coming back to our old neighborhood, opening a restaurant and getting chased out because we didn't have our system down," Donnie said. Celebrate ArtWeek with this Starry Night sangria recipe

The folks at Joe's American Grill on Newbury Street are celebrating the start of ArtWeek on April 27 by offering a special cocktail that pays tribute to one of Vincent van Gogh's iconic paintings.

Bartenders/artists Martina Raimier and Jade Chauvin have been able to combine their passions for making drinks and art with the Starry Night sangria, which will be available at Joe's throughout ArtWeek. In addition to creating the cocktail, the duo is also drawing a funky sidewalk mural in front of the restaurant in honor of the festivities.

"I love the fact that there are so many different mediums to create art," says Chauvin, a Massachusetts native and Boston Conservatory alum who also believes that bartending and art have a lot in common. "They allow a sense of creativity and stem from a desire to make new things for people to enjoy."

Learn the art of making a sweet cocktail with this recipe for the Starry Night sangria.

Hockey world preparing for Bruins, Leafs Game 7

It's do-or-die time in Boston as the Bruins and Maple Leafs meet in Game 7 tonight.

RICH SLATE
sports@metro.us

Up 3-1 in the series after a 3-1 victory at Air Canada Centre last Thursday, few would have predicted that the Bruins would find themselves in their current predicament: tied 3-3 with the Maple Leafs and headed to a do-or-die Game 7 tonight (7:30 p.m. ET, NESN) at TD Garden.

Toronto rallied from the brink of elimination to hold on for a 4-3 win in Game 5 at the Garden on Saturday night and then a 3-1 triumph on their home ice on Monday. No other first-round matchup went the distance, so it's not hyperbole to say that the entire NHL will be watching on Wednesday to see who will face the Lightning in the second round. A win for the B's in Game 7 is still expected but a loss would leave an especially bitter taste for a club that has legitimate Stanley Cup aspirations.

This is Boston's first Game 7 since 2014 (a second-round loss to Montreal) and they are 3-2 in their five most-recent Game 7's dating back to 2010. For what it's worth, they came out on top in three Game 7's when they won the Cup in 2011 (Montreal, Tampa Bay and Vancouver).

"You go back to the drawing board and find some character that we've shown all year," said Bruins center Patrice Bergeron. "You can look back all you want but that's where we're at: it's the position we're in, you have to prevail."

The easiest way to explain Toronto's comeback is that Boston's offense that exploded out of the gates with 12 combined goals in Games 1 and 2 has only registered just nine since then. As you would expect with that sharp Tuukka Rask and the Bruins will have to be on their game to stop Auston Matthews and the Maple Leafs. GETTY IMAGES turn, Maple Leafs goaltender Frederik Andersen has gotten better and better as the series has dragged on. Game 6 was his opus as he was named the first star of the contest after stopping 32 of 33 shots.

"He's making a lot of big saves," said Bruins left winger Brad Marchand. "We've just to keep going. I think that's the only thing. We're getting bodies there, we're getting pucks there, we're getting some really good looks. Just have to keep doing it and hopefully, it pays off for us."

Boston scored first in Game 6 but they became the first team to lose in the series when they did that as Toronto answered 35 seconds later. The Bruins would not find the back of the net again.

All season long (and through the first four games of this series), Marchand, Bergeron and David Pastrnak have been the best forward line in hockey. The problem is that the Leafs have held them all off the scoresheet in the last two tilts and their combined plus-minus has been minus-9 in those particular defeats. Secondary scoring has been a strength for the B's most of the year but other than rookie Jake DeBrusk and David Krejci, few of their other forwards have really produced in this series. Rick Nash's reputation before he got here was that he becomes invisible in the postseason and unfortunately so far he has done nothing but continue to be that guy considering he has one goal and zero assists despite racking up 22 shots on goal.

Home ice typically isn't as important as other sports but in NHL history, the home team is 103-73 in Game 7's. As a franchise, Boston is 12-8 all-time in Game 7's at home (13-12 overall) while Toronto is 5-9 on the road (12-10 overall). Either way, the final result of Wednesday's Game 7 could have a lasting effect on both Original Six clubs. Surprisingly there hasn't been any overtimes yet in this series so don't be shocked if that is needed to decide things.

@DannyPicard

He might have announced that he is coming back next year on Tuesday night, but Rob Gronkowski humiliated the New England Patriots over the weekend.

In what was a major plug for Monster Energy and the sport of motorcycle racing, Gronkowski met with the media on Saturday at Gillette Stadium while promoting the Supercross event taking place inside the building that day.

There were football questions, of course. And rightfully so.

Gronkowski has not been present for the Patriots' voluntary offseason workouts, and since the Super Bowl loss, his status for the 2018 season had been in question. Those questions began when he threatened retirement by planting a report that claimed there's a chance he could walk away from the game and turn to either Hollywood or the WWE, as early as this offseason.

What began as a cheesy sponsorship plug on Saturday, ended as a slap in the face to Bill Belichick, Robert Kraft, and his Patriots teammates who have been working out, voluntarily, across the hall.

That's right, directly across the hall.

The Patriots locker room and workout facility is a stone's throw away from the entrance to the media workroom that Gronkowski held his motocross press conference in, where he continued to threaten retirement and make jokes about working hard on his dirt-biking skills this offseason.

It was a horrible look for Gronkowski. And it was a big "F— you" to the organization that currently employs him.

But it was an even worse look for Tom Brady.

There was once a time when I would watch a distraction-filled circus like Gronkowski's on Saturday and think to myself, "Brady won't like seeing that."

That time is not now. And it's the most troubling aspect of this whole charade.

Instead of calling Gronkowski to remind him of how business is handled in Foxboro, Brady is seemingly on Gronkowski's side, which, in a way, allowed a bleep-show like Saturday's press conference to happen in the first place.

Do we really think Gronkowski would've taken his offseason mind games to these extremes if Brady was a full participant at voluntary workouts and wasn't also involved in a cryptic-message-filled beef with Belichick himself? Please.

But what can Brady really say now? Like Gronkowski, he's also been absent from the team's offseason workouts.

Brady has clearly taken a side here, whether he wants to admit it or not. And the side he's taken is the one that's now beginning to create a distraction, something that someone like Brady usually helps his team try to avoid. Well, there's no avoiding the fact that Brady's current offseason mindset has opened the door for someone like Gronkowski to walk into Gillette Stadium in a motocross jumpsuit — while his teammates are working out across the hall — and embarrass his organization.

What I'm calling embarrassing is what some are calling "fun," as in, "Gronk just wants to have fun."

Look, if the Patriots' tight end — who's still under contract for two more seasons — hosted a Monster Energy circus at the TD Garden, I wouldn't mind one bit.

But he didn't do it at the Garden. He did it at Gillette Stadium, during a time in which he was taking a stand to purposely avoid Gillette Stadium.

What a joke. Only, it wasn't really a funny one.

At least, I wasn't laughing. And I can promise you that Belichick wasn't either.

If only I could say the same about Brady.

Aries Discipline and hard work will pay off, but at what cost? Pace yourself and don't become exhausted trying to take on too many responsibilities or covering for someone else.

Taurus Study every situation you face carefully and figure out what will serve you best and help you excel. Take care of your health, and make time for the people closest to you.

Gemini Honesty may be a problem when dealing with others. Listen to what's being said and be wary of evasiveness. If you don't fully understand something, ask direct questions.

Cancer Your intuition won't let you down. You can be sure of your feelings. Answers to your questions will resolve any issue you have with someone using manipulative tactics.

Leo Go over your personal finances and recent spending habits. Resolve any unfinished business and clear the way for new beginnings. Speak up if you disagree with someone.

Virgo Command the floor at meetings to make a difference. Offer alternatives and back up your plans with reasonable timelines and procedures that you know will run smoothly.

Libra Make constructive changes at home or to your lifestyle that will ease financial stress and encourage greater personal stability. Keep your personal matters and passwords secret.

Scorpio Get involved in a project, protest or group effort that you believe in. The people you surround yourself with will make a difference to your attitude and your accomplishments.

Sagittarius Emotional deception is apparent. Whether it's someone leading you astray or you just refusing to see the truth, problems will arise if you don't re-evaluate what's going on.

Capricorn Look at your financial situation or personal expenditures and make necessary adjustments. Home improvements will turn out to be beneficial.

Aquarius Talk is cheap if you don't follow through on your words. Someone will give you false hope or will expect something that you cannot deliver.

Pisces Use your intuition, imagination and vision to get ahead. Be detailed and precise, and present what you can do with finesse and confidence. EUGENIA LAST
